

A blighted Russian city pans for cash (International Herald Tribune)

Contributed by
Wednesday, 11 July 2007
Last Updated Thursday, 08 November 2007

The smelters of Norilsk produce a fifth of the world's nickel while emitting 1.9 million tons of sulfur dioxide a year - more than all of France. Spotting a business opportunity, factory officials have brought in a contractor to extract metals from the black sludge that covers the region, and make a few more rubles.

The smelters of Norilsk produce a fifth of the world's nickel while emitting 1.9 million tons of sulfur dioxide a year - more than all of France. Spotting a business opportunity, factory officials have brought in a contractor to extract metals from the black sludge that covers the region, and make a few more rubles.

Read more at:

http://us.rd.yahoo.com/dailynews/rss/search/parking+lot+sweepers/SIG=11qr1ndi7/*http%3A//www.iht.com/articles/2007/07/11/news/letter.php.